ENGRATION.

The subject of emigration is well discussed in the letter from an occasional correspondent, given in another place. The loss of emigration should be subjected in the letter from an occasional correspondent, given in another place. The loss of emigration because of the want of cheap transportation facilities from the east to the west, is a very serious one, and every means within our power should be employed to supply the deficiency in question. The rapid growth of the northwest, with its long winters and sheep snows, is due chiefly to emigration.
